CALL FOR PROPOSALS - COURSE-EMBEDDED TRAVEL, 2014-15

Are you teaching a 200- or 300-level course in 2014-15 whose international perspective could be strengthened by traveling with students to a particular site, either in the U.S. or abroad? Are you designing a course that could benefit from travel to enhance its global dimensions? If so, the Center for International Studies (CIS) invites you to submit a one-page proposal for course-embedded travel. Proposals should make a case for how travel enhances course objectives, its exceptional educational payoff, its link to the faculty member’s scholarly interests, plans for time spent off-campus including familiarity with and institutional connections at the point(s) of destination, and how results of the trip will be shared with the larger campus community.

The attached guidelines offer examples of past course-embedded travel, and a checklist of criteria used by the CIS Advisory Board in selecting proposals for a final round. Please contact David Cook-Martín or Lynn Stafford with questions you may have after reviewing the guidelines.

The Center for International Studies (CIS) fosters learning and inquiry through global connections and engagement. If you think your travel idea advances this goal and meets the stated criteria please submit your one-page proposal to Lynn Stafford (stafford@grinnell.edu) by Friday, November 22, 2013. Finalists for the grant will be asked to submit a more detailed proposal, along with the course syllabus in early Spring 2014.
