Course Requirements:
This is a seminar course. It is imperative that each student carefully reads all of the assigned readings on time and comes to class ready to participate in class discussion. Class preparedness and participation is a major factor in the final grade and unexcused absences will count against this final grade. You may not pass this class if you miss more than 35% of the class sessions. The course is based entirely around our class sessions.

Course Objectives:
On one level, the objectives of this class are to help us question our ideas of “gender,” “sex,” and “sexuality.” We will do this through a discussion of theoretical reading that question what these terms mean, what they have meant, and how they came to be. We will also, however, do this through analysis of the ways that gender, sex, and sexuality have been experienced historically. On another level, this class is focused on helping us all become better critical readers. Critical reading is a highly active and engaged practice. To this end, our class discussions and our assignments will all challenge us to better engage with the material we are reading.

Grading:
- Assignment One (10%) [Feb. 7]
- Assignment Two (10%) [Mar. 12]
- Assignment Three (10%) [Apr. 25]
- Weekly Reading Reflection (20%)
- Leading Class Discussion (5%)
- Participation (15%)
- Final Project (30%) [May. 18]

Assignment One: Understanding Gender (3pp.)
As we progress through our class, we will see just how malleable the concept of gender has been. In order to maximize what we learn from this class, we all need a strong, theoretically-informed understanding of gender. The first readings in this class will get us started down this road, and this paper will solidify our initial understanding. In this assignment, you should carefully review the readings and your notes to write a three-page discussion of how best to understand gender. (Be sure to base your paper only on what we have read in class. You should not use outside sources. This assignment will require an engaged reading with the class texts.)

Assignment Two: Recovering History (3pp.)
The only historical source we are reading in this class is Consorts of the Caliphs. This is a prosopographical work with interesting, but all-too-short, discussions of various consorts (concubines?). Choose one woman in this text and see what further information you can find about her and her legacy (her poetry and/or her patronage). From the endnotes in this book, see what other sources (if any) include further information about her, her accomplishments, and (as a last resort) her husband. (This assignment will rely exclusively on outside books, journal articles, and academic reference works. This assignment is an attempt at historical research and further contextualization. This will be frustratingly difficult and it is understandable if you cannot find much and write a paper in that vein.)

Assignment Three: Book Review (3pp.)
Good reading is thoughtful reading. This means not only understanding the text, but how each section relates to each other, how each chapter relates to each other, and maybe even how the text relates to other things that have been written. For this assignment, choose either Before Homosexuality or Politics of Piety and write a review of the book. A book review demonstrates your thorough reading of the book in that it discusses the main argument of a book, follows this argument through the individual chapters, and talks about how the book relates to other literature. It also, often, has an evaluation of the book. You might want to look at other academic book reviews as models. (For this assignment, you should contextualize one book within the other literature that we have read for this class.)

Weekly Reading Reflection (~450 words)
As part of our engagement with class material, you should submit a reflection on our readings and class discussion. This should be a thoughtful reflection that engages in some way with what we have covered in class. This may be an extended piece on one thing, or a broader discussion of various things. On occasion, I may give a more detailed prompt for the weekly reflections. If there is a prompt, it will be distributed via e-mail on Mondays after class. Reflections are due by e-mail every Sunday at 4:00pm. There is no reflection due Feb. 12, March 12, or April 25. The final reflection is due May 2.

Leading Class Discussion:
Once during the semester, you and a partner will take on the responsibility of leading class discussion for the readings from El-Rouayheb, Mahmood, and Taylor. In order to prepare, you should make sure you understand the readings, both conceptually and practically. You should prepare a brief presentation of the reading (~10 mins.), and a series of questions for discussion. These should be questions you thought to yourself as you read the reading. You must meet with the instructor prior to your session. (This assignment will help us see a variety of different reading strategies and approaches. For the presenters, it will also help them engage deeply with a short section of a book.)

Final Project.
We will talk about the final project the class before spring break. Your final project should address the themes of our course in some way. It is up to you to decide what course materials to base your final project on. The final project may take a variety of forms, including, but not limited to: a 10-minute film, an interactive website, a short play, a podcast episode, a lengthy piece of creative writing, or a more traditional 2,000–2,500-word research paper. Students must submit a final project proposal on April 1st, 2019, and rubrics for evaluating different project types will be distributed the week following the submission of the proposal. Students may change their proposal after receiving the rubric, but only in consultation with me and no later than two weeks after the initial proposal. You will present your project in class during the final week of class. We will discuss these requirements in detail later in the semester.

Learning Outcomes:

- Gain an understanding of different approaches to the academic study of gender.
- Apply particular theories of sex and/or gender to a variety of historical and contemporary issues.
- Learn how to articulate specific research problems or questions.
- Develop critical thinking skills related to how communities construct religion and religious traditions and how scholars relate to these communities.
- Think through and engage complex and theoretical scholarly arguments.

Course Policies:

- The Religious Studies Department prioritizes belonging and generosity in our learning spaces. For both teachers and learners, this means respecting and remaining curious about others’ individual experiences, traditions, and ideas; working toward critical distance from aspects of our own experiences; and maintaining openness to being unsettled by perspectives and experiences different from our own. We ask that all members of our course communities consider equity of access in the ways we speak and engage others, share materials for exploration and discussion, and use examples when contributing to class conversation.

- You are expected to attend every class. Two or more unexcused absences will have a negative impact on your final grade. Grinnell College offers alternative options to complete academic work for students who observe religious holy days. Please contact me within the first three weeks of the semester if you would like to discuss a specific instance that applies to you. If you miss a class, make sure you do the assigned readings and get notes from a classmate. Class preparedness and participation is a major factor in the final grade and unexcused absences will count against this final grade. Missing more than 30% of the classes with unexcused absences will result in a failing grade.

- Please send all e-mail to sabaelia@grinnell.edu. During the week, I will respond to all e-mail within 24 hours. It may take longer to respond during the weekend. Feel free to send any questions you may have about the course, although I rather discuss substantive issues in person rather than via e-mail.

- We are undertaking this semester in the midst of what is known as the Covid Pandemic. The instructor will be happy to work with students on an individual basis to make up lost class time and work in the event of a covid-related extended absence. In the event this becomes necessary, we will work together to come to a fair and equitable solution.
• Breaches of academic integrity will result in an official disciplinary process guided by the Dean’s office. If you have questions about the Academic Honesty policy, the College’s Academic Honesty policy is located in the Student Handbook available online [link]. The College expects that students are aware of and meet the expectations of this policy. Assignments in this course are not collaborative. If you have any questions, please see me before you turn in your work.

• The College supports students’ efforts to meet both class obligations and religious ones. If you plan to observe religious holidays that coincide with class meetings or assignment due dates, please meet with me during the first two weeks of classes so that we may reach a mutual understanding of how you can meet these obligations.

• I strive to create a fully inclusive classroom, thus I welcome individual students to approach me about distinctive learning needs. In particular, I encourage students with disabilities to have a conversation with me and disclose how our classroom or course activities could impact the disability and what accommodations would be essential to you. You will also need to have a conversation about and provide documentation of your disability to the Coordinator for Disability Resources, located on the ground level of Steiner Hall (641-269-3124).
